BRET BAIER, FOX NEWS ANCHOR: Good way to end it. Thank you panel tomorrow on SPECIAL REPORT German Chancellor Angela Merkel comes to Washington. You know, we've asked her to come on SPECIAL REPORT. We'll see what happens. Never know.

Either way we'll cover the trip. Thanks for inviting us into your home tonight. That's it for the SPECIAL REPORT. Fair, balanced and unafraid "FOX NEWS PRIMETIME" hosted by Pete Hegseth five seconds late start right now.

PETE HEGSETH, FOX NEWS HOST: No problem. The headline should read you can't wear white heels with black socks Bret. Not a thing at least maybe now.

BAIER: No go.

HEGSETH: May be now. All right, Bret thank you very much. Good evening America at 7 pm on the East Coast and 6 pm in God's country, which means it's time for FOX NEWS PRIMETIME. I'm your Host, Pete Hegseth.

In moments we have a major update on a story we brought you last night, we've uncovered that the army of "Trusted messengers going door to door to make sure you're vaccinated may have much more sinister and ideological motives".

But first, we go to another leftist vaccination effort, this time targeting children. Many parents are skeptical and rightfully so about whether their kids really need a COVID vaccine. That is their right. Data shows that minors are at miniscule risk from COVID still government bureaucrats and left wing media. Well, they're trying to shame every parent into getting their kids inoculated.

But it turns out after a year of COVID disinformation; many parents are weary of listening to these experts. So schools and state governments have decided to undermine adult parents get this by directly marketing the vaccine to children directly striking the fear of God and a minor so they can come home and tell you that they need a vaccine to save themselves.

The experts have spoken the parents so yesterday written off. More kids coming home to shame their parents based on facts from government teachers don't we get enough of that from higher education. It seems that most health officials are fine with the left using school system to indoctrinate kids against their parents' wishes.

But tonight, one state is standing up and saying stop. Leaked internal documents reportedly show that Tennessee's Health Commissioner, Dr. Lisa Piercey is putting an end to these types of twisted practices. She's instructing the Tennessee Health Department to no log - first no longer mail notices to minors reminding them to get a shot. And second, she's stopping vaccine drives at public schools.

No, you guessed it, the left is predictably outrage. The public education system is their greatest tool in indoctrinating and now inoculating America's youth. They don't want a pesky doctor taking that away from them. So of course they you know, dust off the old playbook. They flipped through the pages and ultimately landed on their trusty you're killing America's kid's talking point.

Chelsea Clinton, the self-described global health advocate, which is code for my dad was a president so I don't need a real job. Toss to the first stone. She exclaimed, "This is so disturbing". Public health officials in Tennessee should be encouraging teenagers to get vaccinated not capitulating to anti vaxxers.

Teens who don't get vaccinated against COVID-19 are at greater risk of hospitalization, death long haul COVID. The truth is this has nothing to do with being anti-Vax. Tennessee is not preventing anybody from getting a vaccine. This is about not wanting government officials going behind your back and brainwashing your kids with fear and misinformation.

And if you want to talk about the risk to minors, maybe Chelsea Clinton should take a look at the data. In Tennessee 11 people and God bless their souls. But 11 people under the age of 17 have died from COVID since the China virus arrived. That's 0.7 deaths per 100,000 teenagers. That's a point 00000.7 percent chance of death. That's tough to read on the teleprompter.

Not necessarily the death sentence. The media and Democrats are making it out to be. Here now Tammy Bruce Radio Talk Show Host and a Fox News Contributor and Tomi Lahren Host of "No Interruption" on Fox Nation.

Tommy, let me start with you. You're from Tennessee. When you hear this at least someone standing up and saying we don't need to go into America's schools pressing kids to get a vaccine.

TOMI LAHREN, FOX NATION HOST, "NO INTERRUPTION": This is just another reminder folks; this is Tennessee, not California. We will not stand for this. But I'd like to remind folks especially the Coronavirus fear mongers out there like Chelsea Clinton who were saying that we are trying to discourage people from getting vaccinated.

No, there's simply as you mentioned, Pete all this is saying we're not going to have vaccine drives on school property. And we're not going to send out postcards to minors, telling them to get their vaccine or to get their second dose and those postcards by the way will still be sent out to adult so liberals fear not.

But really what this comes from is that there was a top vaccine official at the health department who was now fired, who was essentially giving a roadmap on how they could exploit the mature minor doctrine to be able to administer vaccines to 14 to 17-year-olds, without their parents' consent.

She put a roadmap, a memo out there about kind of how to exploit that and how to do that and parents, rightfully so were very angry about it. So Tennessee stood up and we said we're not going to tolerate it anymore.

HEGSETH: Yes, followed by a door knock, you might get some mail in your mailbox for your minor. Tammy, Isn't this what the left assumes they can and should do parents get out of the way? We're the experts and inside the confines of our public schools, of course, you have no right to know. That's our job.

TAMMY BRUCE, FOX NEWS CONTRIBUTOR: Yes, and it is especially important to them now to have access to children. And I say this because of course; they're also in a drive for the most part to say that 16-year-old should be able to vote.

You have school systems, where a child can access health care, or what is some call health care abortions on occasion, at a school without telling parents without getting parental permission. You've got this as part of that dynamic of explaining that, well, you know, children can make decisions at a certain age.

And of course, at some point if they can vote, and if they can have abortions, they can get tattoos, they can decide to get a vaccine without telling their parents or at least be communicated to by the government as a minor. The arguments going to be well, they can have sex, they can make their own decisions.

This is important because the left understands that American adults do not buy what they're selling.

HEGSETH: Yes.

BRUCE: They know that in order to get the next generation, they have to start indoctrinating children. And of course, parents have seen this Pete throughout COVID, with what teachers have been doing in the school room, critical race theory for children, and then using children as human shields effectively to stay out of the classroom, despite the negative impact on children.

So this is just another step. And even though it's Tennessee, and I love the State of Tennessee, it is a reminder that liberals everywhere, problem that Democrats everywhere a problem because this happened in Tennessee, thank goodness, the Republicans, they were able to stop that.

HEGSETH: That's a good Capstone, the fact that it is happening in Tennessee, and they're stopping it means it's probably happening where you are, and public officials are encouraging it as opposed to stand up to it. You too, if you would, Tammy and Tomi stay put because I want to follow up on a story we broke for you last night that I want your commentary on.

How the government is bringing its vaccination effort to your doorstep? We talked about it last night, literally in North Carolina, where groups are going door to door not just with information about the COVID shot, but with actual vaccines. They're bringing the vaccines with them. Do you want to hear you can have it?

Well, now the Biden Administration told us that people would be coming to a neighborhood near you. They told us that, but who exactly where are these people going to be?

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

DR. ANTHONY FAUCI, DIRECTOR, NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ALLERGY AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES: We're getting trusted messages to try and get people to understand and appreciate why it's important for their own safety?

JEN PSAKI, WHITE HOUSE PRESS SECRETARY: Local trusted messengers, doctors, faith leaders, community leaders--

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: Doctors, faith leaders, community leaders. So as part of our efforts, trusted messengers may go door to door.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

HEGSETH: So trusted messengers is clearly the talking point. They said it over and over. Well, what can be wrong with that? Well, as we found out last night, it's not just doctors or members of the clergy showing up at your door. It's far left activist groups like Action NC, who had this big old resist fist right there on their homepage.

That got us thinking. It couldn't be the only progressive group going door to door passing out vaccine info. Well, it turns out, we were right. I hate that we're right. But we were. It's a long list of groups like IE United, whose progressive platform pushes radical racial reforms and calls for climate justice.

Its website also links directly to Planned Parenthood, and Alliance SD, a group that wants to build a more progressive San Diego, and the CNC Education Fund whose liberal agenda extends to immigration, health care for all and the environment.

And I'm sure all of these trusted messengers are going door to door for free, right, just out of the goodness of their heart. They couldn't be using COVID outreach as an opportunity to - I don't know line their pockets with government money and freshen up the old voter databases.

Here's a document we got from canvassers in Lake County Illinois, telling them that you should ignore no solicitation signs and knock on doors anyway. So if you put a notice list don't ignore it. This this document says point number one you are not soliciting because you are not seeking an order for any goods or services you are not considered a solicitor.

Therefore no solicitation signs do not apply to you storm right in. In another point report on your work! Be sure to fill out the door knocking spreadsheet with the counts of who still needs vaccine, who's already vaccinated? Who needs more info - cetera?

Because remember, it's not just a matter of what information these trusted messages are handing out. It's what information they can collect on you and your neighbors. Let's bring back in Tammy Bruce and Tomi Lahren.

Tammy, you've been a student of the left you understand how they operate? Would it surprise you that at all that the government would enlist left wing groups?

BRUCE: I lost Pete.

HEGSETH: Tammy, oh you lost me. OK, we're going to go to Tomi and then we're going to go to Tammy. And we'll get back with Tomi. Does it surprise you at all same question. The left wing groups should leverage a government effort called a public private partnership, call it what you want to push the COVID vaccine and maybe more?

LAHREN: You know, Pete, I lived in California for several years. So what this sounds like to me is ballot harvesting on steroids or should I say on COVID vaccine. So of course, they're going to go there, they're going to get inflammation. This whole door to door vaccine patrol push is ridiculous in and of itself. And it's not going to go well.

But furthermore, let's think about this. For a year and a half, especially Democrat-run states told us that we couldn't go to work that only certain things were essential that we couldn't have our children in school, but now they think it's appropriate to send people door to door to push and shame the vaccine on Americans.

Again, they think that we're inept. They don't think that we're capable of making our own health and wellness decisions. And now this is just another opportunity for them to push their radical ideology. And we know that they're going to do it and they're all going to do that again with the cover of Coronavirus, just like they did in 2020. This is the same game. It's just a new page in the rulebook.

HEGSETH: Absolutely. Tammy, I think we have you I think you're back. Did we gotcha?

BRUCE: Yes.

HEGSETH: There we are, love it.

BRUCE: Yes. There you do yes.

HEGSETH: The magic of television. OK, same question, though. You're a student of the left you understand how they operate?

Would it surprise you at all that if the White House and the bureaucracy in Washington says OK, we're going to administer the COVID vaccine, we're going to use trusted messengers, they would immediately enlist left wing organizations to go door to door and there's no way they're doing this for free, Tammy. So what are they doing?

BRUCE: Yes, yes, forgive me, since I didn't hear Tomi's answer. And this may be somewhat repetitive. This is a way to move massive amounts of money to leftist community organizers. This is a page out of Barack Obama's playbook. This is exactly what they're doing.

Your tax dollars moving to these entities, this is the 2022 and 2024 campaign, once again, exploiting a health issue, exploiting the populations. And frankly, they think that we'd rather not have federal workers do this. The fact that they're using local individuals is even more intimidating, who then will knock on your door be staying in that community.

And especially in that, in that paper you received that that insider information targeting instructions and targeting seniors, and targeting building managers asking for information about the people inside any kind of an apartment building or any dynamic like that.

It is it - I think it's meant to be intimidating. It is unacceptable. No solicitation signs should send message that do not knock on my door if you're a stranger. These are - it is an outrageous dynamic. And both of these stories, what we talked about earlier in this one are the same.

It's the government trying to train you that if there belong in your house that you have no autonomy left, and of course they need to find out that's incorrect.

HEGSETH: I think we've just hit the tip of the iceberg on something much bigger. You think about these huge COVID relief bills. Where's that money going? How's it being implemented? Who is ultimately receiving it and what are they doing with it? Tomi Lahren and Tammy Bruce, thank you so much great stuff.

LAHREN: Thank you. Thanks Pete.

BRUCE: Thanks Pete.

HEGSETH: You got it. All right, coming up the Biden Administration's plan to combat COVID misinformation, one private text message at a time and you thought they weren't looking through your phone. Missouri Senator Josh Hawley joins us next.

HEGSETH: So secret the government's been using social media to spy on us we know that. But now the Biden Administration wants to team up with cell phone companies to read your personal text messages. But don't worry, their intentions are innocent.

They simply want to monitor vaccine misinformation shared between family and friends. You know your mom, if your mom texts you anything negative about the shot or dare question by this new door to door policy. You could expect to be inundated on your private texts by so called fact checkers.

Joining me now Missouri Senator Josh Hawley Senator, thanks for being here. How is reading someone's text messages different than reading someone's private mail?

SEN. JOSH HAWLEY (R-MO): It's not any different Pete. And you know I have to say, listen to this. It sounds like something out of Beijing. I mean, we know that the Communist Chinese Party has built this surveillance state. And now it sounds like Joe Biden wants to bring that to the United States of America.

I mean, getting into our phones now, it's bad enough that they use social media to censor us to spy on us to shut down speech. But now private text messages I mean, what what's going to happen next, we're going to take away our phones, are they going to tell Verizon or AT&T or whomever to shut down people cell service, if they text things that the government doesn't like, this is insane. It is un-American, it's probably unconstitutional.

HEGSETH: That's what I wanted to ask you. How is it not unconstitutional considering any number of the amendments and the Bill of Rights that the government could do this? I mean, there's got to be an avenue to challenge this, or does this something that will happen without most of us know?

HAWLEY: Well, I can't imagine that the government has the power to look at our text messages without a warrant. I mean, under our current law, they don't. Here's what worries me though, Pete, is pressuring the phone companies pressuring Verizon, and AT&T and whomever else to voluntarily "Comply and tell them tell the government what we're texting what we're saying on our private messages".

That's the real danger here. It's this big government, big corporation alliance. That's what we've got to be wary of. And we've got to say, come on. I mean, let's stand up for free speech in this country.

HEGSETH: It's always health and safety that is the umbrella over which they decide they can intrude into our lives. Senator, you've been all over this topic. Please keep us updated. Thank you.

HAWLEY: Thank you.

HEGSETH: Got it. Well, for hundreds of years, people are predicting the collapse of civilization is suppose doomsday clock was even created in 1947. To mark the days' humanity had left? Well, in 1972, a report from MIT predicted so that society would end sometime in the 21st century.

And now new research says they might be right. And that civilization as we know, it could end in as few as 20 years. So we're all going to die? Or is the sky falling once again? Douglas Murray, Author of "The madness of crowds" joins me now. Douglas thanks for being here.

Now this break - the study breaks down more on population and resources and all of that, but we've got the latest Doomsday predictions from the climate crowd. What do you make of this study? And could it be right?

DOUGLAS MURRAY, AUTHOR OF, "THE MADNESS OF CROWDS": Well, a great place to be with you Pete. You know in the 1970s were a great time for these sorts of studies. There were studies you can turn up from the 1970s that claimed that by now, we'd all be freezing to death or boiling to death.

There are 1970s studies to say that by now the world was going to be overpopulated and under populated, that there was going to be a scramble for water, the last remaining drops, and that we're also going to be drowning in the stuff.

So the problem with futurology has always been the same. You know, you're a military man, you know, the old saying about military campaigns. They don't - the plans don't survive their first encounter with the enemy. It's the same with futurology.

Futurology, never survives its first encounter with the future, things always change. The interesting thing about this report is, of course, the fact that it predicts that there's basically going to be civilizational collapse in the 21st century due to among other things, economic strain.

I'd have said one thing about that, though, that that claiming that there's going to be civilizational collapse at some point in the 21st century is a pretty, pretty good bet. It's where it's going to happen and when that we all want to know about.

HEGSETH: You're exactly right. Innovation is what always stifles the futurist. Absolutely - you can't factor in what you don't know. But at the same time, we all have three other story resonates as well. We all have this feeling in our gut, like the status quo feels untenable.

Forget about the climate zealots who are always yelling that it's going to be too hot or too cold. But the way we're coexisting as a culture, especially in western civilization can't hold I think that's why it resonates.

MURRAY: Yes, I think there are several big things. I mean, one is, of course, we're all aware that the last year has been highly unusual. You know, China, and the virus managed to crash the whole global economy. And then China walked away with as the only country with actual growth in 2020.

And there's something very unnerving about all of this, unnerving about society, shifting as much as it has, and still feeling like we haven't quite felt the consequences. That's one thing. But of course, in countries like this one, we've also got all these societal factors going on at the moment underneath us.

All the people who are trying to divide America, all the people who are trying to make Americans hate each other and I think if I was in 1970s MIT person, I'd put my money on that being the problem in the 21st century in America, not any lack of ingenuity or lack of resources, but people being divided and turning on the foundations of their own country. For me, for America, that's the biggest threat.

HEGSETH: Well, they've done it. They've done it intentionally. Douglas Murray, I'm a number one in your fan club. You always get a smart take. Thank you very much. Appreciate it.

MURRAY: It's a great pleasure.

HEGSETH: You got it. All right coming up, Taliban violence surging as the U.S. inches closer to pulling our troops fully out of Afghanistan so should we stay? Or should we go? My old letters from the front lines of the war on in Afghanistan might have some interesting answers. Same with Former Navy SEAL Rob O'Neill joins us next.

HEGSETH (on camera): We live in times when all too often satire mirrors reality. Sometimes it's funny. Sometimes it's sad. Sometimes it's both. Enter the war in Afghanistan. Deadly serious and, yet, so damn unserious at the same time. So much heroism and valor and so many lives sacrificed at the altar of freedom. I know many of them. I know their widows. I know their parents. The virtuous legacy of Afghanistan belongs to the American war fighter, the trigger pullers. God bless all of them.

Then there was the mission. The troops always wondered about that, which is why a recent duffle blog article which is satire think Babylon Bee for the military. It caught my eye. It was actually sent to me by group of fellow vets, guys that I served with.

The fake headline reads, quote, "U.S. quietly drops enduring and freedom portions of operation enduring freedom." The satire piece continues. "Henceforth, all U.S. military activity in Afghanistan shall be known simply as the operation, read a Department of Defense press release, which went largely unreported by major news outlets. This new mission is better aligned with our country's strategic goals in the region moving forward, of which, honestly, your guess is as good as ours.

The statement added that the name the operation was chosen because it was the only thing, quote, "appropriately vague and ridiculous enough to capture the full absurdity of the past 20 years."

As I said, when satire mirrors real life. I served in Iraq before I deployed to Afghanistan. Before I left for deployment to Iraq, I had a pessimistic view of the war. Negative headlines were everywhere. We were told there was a quagmire. Instead, after a year of combat I came home cautiously optimistic. Iraq had some basic fundamentals. A history of central governance, modern infrastructure, a mostly literate and educated population, a real national army and some semblance of pluralism.

And were killing scores of Al Qaeda and other Islamic thugs. Iraq at least had a chance if we handled it correctly which we ultimately did not, of course. We were told Iraq was the bad war and Afghanistan the good war. Then, I deployed to Afghanistan. I landed at the now deceased Bagram Air Base beaming with optimism and flew out nine months later realizing the war was already lost. It was 2012.

Today, I went back and read the letters I wrote home from Afghanistan. It was like reading letters from a guy being slowly mugged by reality. We could surge and conduct counter insurgency all we wanted. It wasn't going to matter. Afghanistan didn't want freedom. And our commitment wasn't enduring. The operation was doomed to fail. We knew it then and we know it today.

Afghanistan had none of those ingredients I saw in Iraq. It was and is biblical times with AK-47s and cell phones. One of my letters home included this Doocy (Ph). The lack of education and level of ignorance in Afghanistan is staggering. Literally, only one in 10 men who joined the Afghan National Army can write his own name. And only slightly more can count.

So, the guys who can't read and can't count were going to fight off the Taliban and surely manage the sophisticated military equipment we were giving them. Worse, as I wrote about, every Afghan army unit was given more, newer, and better military equipment than the National Guard units in your home state and mine currently have today.

For example, when I was in Afghanistan, in Afghan heavy weapons battalion was given 18 brand new 50 caliber machine guns and dozens of smaller caliber heavy weapons and RPGs. I challenge you to walk into any army National Guard armory in the United States and ask them how many functioning 50 caliber machine guns they have. There won't be many, if any.

Ten years ago, we knew much of that equipment was being sold away in Pakistan. Today it's falling into the hands of the Taliban. Imagine, if we equipped ourselves at home instead of equipping illiterate poppy farmers who don't even trust fellow soldiers in their unit.

The operation sadly in Afghanistan is going to fall apart. It's going to fall apart quickly. As I saw 10 years ago, it was obvious to anyone who wasn't blindly invested that the Taliban maintained and maintains a psychological grip on the country, which isn't even a country. It's all about family clan tribe, religion and region.

The Afghan national government is a western fabrication. Ninety-seven percent of Afghanistan's gross domestic product, their economy, 97 percent is linked to foreign aid. Their real economy is drugs. It's opium. Outside of their capital city of Kabul, there is no real infrastructure and no education. We built schools and hospitals. And then our Afghan friends stole the furnishings and the Taliban blew them up.

Now, some elite and well-trained Afghans will fight. But most can't or won't. The real power has been and remains with the war lords and the Taliban.

The headlines each day underscore this. As the Taliban take more and more ground, the border with Pakistan was never even close to being closed, so we fought the war next to a giant safe zone for the enemy on an arbitrary line. Should we keep fighting this? Hell no. Should we learn from it? We'd better. I feel horrible for the Afghan people. Especially women and girls. But it's their country now. We stayed too long. Our soldiers did all they could while our generals and politicians dithers for two decades.

Our last job is to get our Afghan advisers and interpreters out of there now. Reports out today signal that the Biden administration will announce the start of operation allied refuge, a U.S. Air Force led air lift to evacuate tens of thousands of our Afghan allies. Let's hope this operation goes better than the last one.

When I was training for my deployment to Afghanistan, I was aroused out of my bunk at Fort Dix, New Jersey with the news that Osama bin Laden was dead. It changed the war and probably should have ended it.

Our next guest shot Bin Laden in the face. Joining me now is Navy SEAL Rob O'Neill. Rob, 20 years, a lot of thoughts, a lot of experiences, people know you from the Bin Laden raid but you have spent multiple tours over many years in Afghanistan. Am I off base here?

ROB O'NEILL, FORMER NAVY SEAL, KILLED BIN LADEN: I think you are completely on base, Pete. And thanks for having me. Yes, it's one of those places Afghanistan where if you haven't been there, you wouldn't believe people.

HEGSETH: Yes.

O'NEILL: One of the best stories that I have is one of my interpreters was also my chef. I got in an argument with him one time and I said you know, Adriz (Ph), if we surround Afghanistan with 300-foot wall that was electrified, you wouldn't have a television in 10,000 years. My country put a man on the moon and back in 200 years and he said Mr. Rogers (Ph) so stupid, you can't put a man on the moon it's this big.

And that's -- that's I mean, some of these people, not only do they not know how old they are, they don't know what time is. It's a different world. I have seen true poverty that children with no clothes playing in sewage. It's up is down and down is up. We can never install Jeffersonian democracy there. They don't want it. They want the valleys. One of the best quotes that I have ever heard we have the watches but they have the time.

HEGSETH: And that's not to disparage Afghans. We've met wonderful people over there. We get it. But it's the other side of the moon, to your point. It's an entirely different world. We tried to build a top down Afghan army. And I'm sure you would have met the best trained Afghans. There will be ones that will stay to fight. But, ultimately, was your experience that those with the Afghan National Army if the Taliban is winning, they are probably going to that side.

O'NEILL: It is such a difficult place to be that a lot of those people and, again, some of the best people I have ever met in my life were Afghanis.

HEGSETH: Yes.

O'NEILL: Pashtuns. Some of the best people ever. They have Pashtunwali which if you ask for help, they will give it to you. But they're also fighting for money. Haqqani network pays, Taliban pays, we pay. Some of the -- you know, they don't want a propped-up proxy government. They want something that the people have and that's what the Taliban is. They are going to come back.

I mean, it seems like yesterday we are watching people shave their beards and 20 years ago they're coming back.

HEGSETH: Yes.

O'NEILL: It's that simple.

HEGSETH: Rob, real quick, we are out of time. But when should we have left in your mind? I mean, declared victory and said hey, we've done our peace.

O'NEILL: We should have been out there in 2003. I was there in 2005. That's when we rescued the lone survivor Marcus Luttrell. There is a big difference between cities and valleys. They want their valleys. And that's what they want. Again, they don't know what time is. We should have been out a long time ago.

HEGSETH: So true.

O'NEILL: We should keep air bases like Bagram and Jalalabad and across border from things like (Inaudible). That's it.

HEGSETH: Yes. Or maybe after Bin Laden was killed as well. Rob O'Neill, thank you for the insight.

O'NEILL: Thank you.

HEGSETH: The moon this big. I'll never forget it.

A Minnesota state rep says he was pulled over for driving while black. But the body cam footage disagrees. We find out what really happened after the break.

HEGSETH (on camera): Welcome back. A Democratic lawmaker in Minnesota claims he was pulled over for, quote, "driving while black last weekend." But his town's police chief disagrees and is demanding an apology.

There is more to this story. Here to bring it chief breaking news correspondent Trace Gallagher. He got the details. Trace?

TRACE GALLAGHER, FOX NEWS CHIEF CORRESPONDENT: Hey, Pete. This police stop came to light because during a rally last week Minnesota Democratic State Representative John Thompson told the crowd and news media that a few days earlier he had been racially profiled by a Saint Paul police officer and pulled over for, quote, "driving while black."

Well now Saint Paul police have released the body cam video of that stop and it shows zero evidence of racism. In fact, Representative Thompson was pulled over for not having a front license plate and speeding away too quickly from a downtown intersection.

During the stop, Thompson also presented a Wisconsin driver's license. His Minnesota driving privileges had been suspended for not paying child support. Listen now to the body cam footage and you will hear Thompson accuse the sergeant of being racist. Watch.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

STATE REP. JOHN THOMPSON (D-MN): You profiled me because you looked me dead in the face and I got a ticket for driving while black. You pulled me over because you saw a black face in this car, brother. And you -- there is no way in hell I'm taking off with you behind me. You looked in this car, you looked in this car, plus you turn and got behind my car.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

GALLAGHER: Now, for clarity, Representative Thompson did not object to anything the officer said or did during the stop. Thompson even released a statement acknowledging, quote, "in the video you won't see the officer do anything that isn't by the book." But he goes on to say, quote, "we need to rewrite the book." Though he doesn't say exactly why.

The Saint Paul police chief says Thompson owes the sergeant an apology. And finally, we should note, issues that have nothing to do with the stop are also being looked into including why Minnesota Rep. Thompson still has a Wisconsin driver's license and why his address in Saint Paul is not in the district he represents. Pete?

HEGSETH: Details. Trace, thank you so much. I appreciate it.

GALLAGHER: Yes.

HEGSETH: All right. Summer courses are underway at colleges across the nation. Well, let's check in on Penn State University. Shall we?

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNKNOWN: I just take the average white guy in class, whoever it is. It doesn't really matter, dude. Look at Russell right here. Just doesn't matter what he does. If I match him up with the black -- a black guy in class or a brown guy even, Russell has a benefit of having white skin. How does it feel knowing that push comes to shove, like your skin is kind of nice?

UNKNOWN: I don't know. It makes me feel like sad.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

HEGSETH (on camera): Joining me now former political science professor at Vanderbilt University, Carol Swain. Carol, thank you so much for being here as always. This was sociology professor Dr. Sam Richard. He loved his lecture so much that he recorded it and posted it online. He is proud of this. Does this surprise you at all?

CAROL SWAIN, FORMER PROFESSOR, VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY: Well, it's very sad that we have reached such a state that a professor who engages in behavior that I would describe as inappropriate and indecent that he is proud of that. No professor or anyone in a position of authority should shame a student.

And so, he, in a classroom, I believe, of 800 students, he picked on one student and if you actually dissect what he said, I would consider that white supremacist talk, because he is assuming that having white skin makes someone superior to racial ethnic minorities. It's in his own words.

HEGSETH: So, exactly, is he making racist statements to justify his political or his ideological perspective. We have been told by many on the left, no, no, no, no, no. We are not teaching critical race theory. That's just something in law school. That's it. It's not anywhere else. Is this ultimately what the teaching of critical race theory looks like in the open?

SWAIN: Yes. Because it says that all white people are privileged because of their white skin. They belong to a class of oppressors or minorities of victims. And so, it is critical race theory. It is everywhere. And this professor and the university they should be ashamed of themselves.

HEGSETH: Absolutely. The student goes on to say it makes me feel sad because God knows I don't deserve it like I didn't choose to be white. That's the whole point, no one chooses their race and ultimately the idea is to get past it certainly not what Penn State is doing. I wonder what they will say about this? We will put in a question. Carol Swain, thank you so much.

SWAIN: Thank you.

HEGSETH: We appreciate it. All right. Coming up, it's not raining cats or dogs. It's raining fish but why? You will find out when we put Will Cain on the clock next.

HEGSETH (on camera): Time to put my good friend and fellow Fox & Friends weekend co-host Will Cain on the clock, dressed so nicely tonight. Four topics, 60 seconds each, let the emojis be our guide.

Let's go, Will. All right. First up, the judge in the Britney Spears conservatorship case has just paved the way for Britney to hire her own attorney after being represented by a court appointed lawyer for the last 13 years. You have your law degree; you know this stuff better than I do. Why wasn't she able to choose her own attorney in the first place?

WILL CAIN, FOX NEWS CO-HOST: I assume, Pete -- and I'm going to be honest, my law degree is not helping me out on this story. It's more like I slept in a Holiday Inn express.

HEGSETH: OK.

CAIN: I assume because in the same reason -- for the same reason she has a conservatorship, they assume she wasn't competent to hire her own attorney or select her own attorney. They are slowly seeming to allow her to be a functioning adult in the United States of America at the age of 39, which I think everyone, regardless of whether or not you think Christina Aguilera was better than Britney Spears or Britney Spears is better --

HEGSETH: It's good debate.

CAIN: -- than X-Tina. It's not a debate. X-Tina was clearly better.

HEGSETH: Really?

CAIN: But everyone agrees that Britney should a functioning adult with her own choices to make. yes, Christina.

HEGSETH: Well, I love the meme back in the say of Britney survived 2007, you can survive today. But should she really be in bondage for 14 years after what happened in 2007? I just don't think so.

CAIN: No. No. By the way, I know you are team Britney over team Christina. Right?

HEGSETH: Hundred percent all the way, it's not even a doubt.

CAIN: I know you are.

HEGSETH: All right. Doesn't look like robots. Get this one, Greg Gutfeld loves the story too. Robots will not be taking over our jobs just yet. A robot named Pepper was hired to work for a nursing home, a funeral business and a bank, but Pepper sucked so much all those jobs it was fired from every single one, so maybe robots won't take over the earth, Will.

CAIN: No. No, see, don't get cocky. That's what's going on here. They are luring you in to get a little cocky and make us think we have the upper hand, we clearly do not. It's going to be a robot takeover.

(CROSSTALK)

HEGSETH: Can you see Pepper on the screen? I mean, Pepper is not going to create world domination, he's barely wearing a hat.

CAIN: Pepper is a false flag operation. The real robots come later. The real robots come with much more ability and size. Don't let little child like Pepper fool you. That's what they run out first to lull us in to complacency --

(CROSSTALK)

HEGSETH: That's a good argument. I will say maybe they used him improperly. At the funeral home they cloth him in Buddhist clergy garb chanting the Buddhist scriptures depending on the sect of the deceased, but it kept breaking down during a practice runs. Not only do you get a robot - -

CAIN: I think --

HEGSETH: -- for your service, but it doesn't work.

CAIN: I think the last job robots will take is spiritual guidance. They'll get all the other ones. That's the last one.

HEGSETH: They went for the wrong one first. You're right.

CAIN: Right.

HEGSETH: All right. Up next, it's raining fish. Let's go to Utah where thousands of fish are dropped from the sky -- look at that film this month by an airplane to help stock local lakes with fishes. PETA cannot be OK with this. Is Will Cain OK with this?

CAIN: OK? It's awesome! What's wrong with it? PETA, what, I don't understand, what, because it's a nosedive from a high-altitude?

HEGSETH: You can't -- you can't drop from that high, what's that they can?

CAIN: I did wonder when I saw the story how many of the fish on impact don't survive but did you see, Pete, the way they used to stock fish high up in the mountains, these mountain lakes? They used to go in on horseback with milk jugs filled with fish. Imagine that trip.

I'm going to bet the fatality rate on that trip was much higher than these fish dropping from the plane. I'm going to bet this is much better. Both for the fish and for us and for the lake.

HEGSETH: Here's what I want to know, why are we dropping fish in lakes that people can't access unless they have a horse?

(CROSSTALK)

CAIN: Because they breed in the stream.

HEGSETH: Is there so much of a need to fish in those places? Or they go downstream.

CAIN: Well, I'm going to assume they breed in the lakes, they live in the lakes, they go downstream, they make their way and we fish them out with our fly-fishing rods, you know.

HEGSETH: I didn't factor the stream technology, that's a real thing.

CAIN: Several thousand feet below.

HEGSETH: Thank you, Will, for educating me. All right. According to a new survey, this is a good one, one in three parents admit the feeling ill when helping their kids with math and science. I know you've had to do that. Are you good at it?

CAIN: No, no, no, no. Not good.

HEGSETH: Good.

CAIN: You have more kids on the age strata than I do, so I've got 13 and 10 and I'm trying to think when the aged out of asking me for advice without my phone -- with no phone in my hand for advice on math. And I'll bet you anything it was in sixth, seventh grade range.

HEGSETH: Yes.

CAIN: After that it was --

(CROSSTALK)

HEGSETH: Well, common course pushed it down to second and third grade because you can't figure out the math. OK. Real quick, 61 percent of people don't know how to calculate the circumference of a circle. Can Will Cain calculate the circumference of a circle?

CAIN: I mean, I don't know. See if I take the radius and multiplied by two and multiply it by pie, I think I get the circumference of the circle.

HEGSETH: Unbelievable! You know I had to look that up! You nailed it!

CAIN: I can just tell you --

HEGSETH: I could.

CAIN: I believe in honesty. I knew you would do this to me, I did. So, I did review articles like which one will he ask me. Pete, swear to God, swear to God, shot in the dark, I looked that one up and it's the one you asked me.

HEGSETH: I'm so impressed, Will Cain. Well done.

CAIN: Yes.

HEGSETH: My man. Thank you very much. We'll do it again tomorrow night if you are willing.

All right. Thanks for watching Fox News Primetime. We're back here tomorrow night. Tucker Carlson up next.
